New Year, New Plans

Millions of people make New Year's Resolutions every year. The research on how many of us keep our resolutions and achieve our goals is all over the map. One thing that seems to be universally agreed upon, however, is that people who actually make resolutions are more likely to commit to their changes than those who just try and change. So, what does that mean for us in business? It means we need to make a plan, develop and maintain good habits, and keep at it. After a while, the 20% growth we seek won't seem so impossible. Reaching for the stars is admirable, but first we have to figure out what changes and steps are needed to get there.

If you need some inspiration, take a look at what billionaire Elon Musk is doing with his SpaceX company. The company aspires to develop a rocket that can be reused multiple times in order to reduce the costs of space exploration. Finding resources in outer space can potentially help us humans here on Earth. The problem that Musk and his company are trying to fix is the costs involved in this exploration, starting with rockets. If he can reduce the costs of the rockets, a lot more can be done for us to go to infinity and beyond. Musk's resolution probably exceeds what most of us resolve to do this year, but we can all share in his vision of skyrocketing our business goals.

At Forwarders, we can help you bring things back to Earth by managing your expectations, helping you set realistic goals, and developing good business habits. Let's take it one rocket ship at a time together. Here's to an explosive 2016!

Regards,
Gary

Blizzard will cost up to $3 billion

by Chris Isidore

The storm that hit the East Coast over the weekend likely cost businesses and residents about $2.5 billion to $3 billion.

That estimate comes from Moody's Analytics, which estimates most of the cost of the storm is from businesses that lost sales and employees that lost wages when they could not get to work. Those losses were partly offset by people who earned wages due to the storm, such as workers who got overtime for plowing roads and parking lots.

Why you should worry about cheap oil

by Matt Egan

Millions of Americans are laughing their way to the gas station. But should they be?

Sure, the stunning crash in oil prices below $30 a barrel seems great for consumers because it's driven gas at the pump below $2 a gallon. And the thinking is that it should help boost the U.S.

economy, with people spending their gas savings.

Most Walmart employees in the U.S. will get a raise next month as part of the second phase of the company's commitment to higher wages.

More than 1.2 million workers at Walmart and Sam's Club will see a pay bump on Feb. 20, in line with Walmart's promise to bring its minimum hourly wage up to $10 this year. Entry-level workers, however, will still receive $9 an hour until completing an in-house training program. The average full-time hourly wage will become $13.38.
